Placing Implants When Teeth Are Removed

IMPLANT PROCESS

Patients often lose molar teeth due to decay, bone loss, or fracture. It is important to replace your molars if they are lost, so as to prevent the teeth next to them from tilting into the area, and the teeth opposing them from drifting into the space where your molars used to be.

In the past, a molar had to be removed and the area allowed to heal before an implant was placed.

An upper molar is fractured and has to be extracted. An implant is placed at the time the molar is removed.

An innovative technique allows us to remove your molar and place an implant during the same visit.

Ten years after the implant has been restored, the area is healthy, and the patient is functioning comfortably.

REGENERATION

Calcium material may be placed around the implant to help the bone heal more quickly in the area. Once the bone attaches to your implant, your dentist restores the implant with an abutment and crown.

When an implant is placed at the time your molar is removed, the number of treatment visits is lessened.

A lower molar is decayed and must be removed. An implant is placed at the time the molar is removed.

In addition, the course of therapy is shortened, and the overall cost of treatment is reduced.

An x-ray of the implant ten years after its restoration demonstrates the healthy bone around the implant.

The cost will vary with the situation. Your dentist will discuss this with you before proceeding with treatment. Please remember there will also be a cost for the restoration of your tooth with your dentist.

Implant placement at the time of molar removal procedure is highly predictable. If the procedure is carried out correctly, the end result is a tooth which may be restored in a healthy manner, and which should prove stable over time.

TESTIMONIALS

What Our Patients Have To Say

"Dr.Ameen makes the dental experience very relaxing and comfortable. I had my wisdom teeth removed and I was extremely nervous, but as always, Dr.Ameen was able to get me relaxed and prepared. When the procedure was done, I was given instructions on how to heal properly and left self-assured about the whole procedure. A gentle, kind, and relaxed dentist is hard to find, but our family found one."
